Alvah Allen Well Successfully Capped Last Sunday Evening

ALLEN WELL

Above photo shows the derrick on the famous Alvah Allen well near here which has focused the attraction of producers from the Atlantic seaboard to Texas.

New Producer Expected to Add Third Big Field to N. Y.-Penna

Well Near Rathbone Struck Paying Flows of Gas at Two Levels — Sand at 510 Feet Resembles the Bradford Strata — Gas Producing Shale at 860 Likened to Long Time Rock in West Virginia.

The Alvah Allen well at Rathbone near this place was successfully capped Sunday evening. This operation which was accomplished only after stubborn resistance by the heavy flow of gas that has been shooting from the well for some time, brings the final chapter in what is termed by gas men to be the most spectacular well yet opened in the New York-Pennsylvania field. The momentous discoveries in this shallow well have now focused the eyes of producers and drillers away from the proven Wayne and Tioga areas to a new major field they believe has been brought to light by this wildcat.

Drilling was finished Sunday evening, after an unsuccessful attempt had been made to hold the giant during the afternoon. In the first trial the cap was fitted to the eight inch casing, but the pressure forced a crack in the cap allowing the gas again to escape. After a vain attempt to mend the cap by welding, a trip was made to a supply house in the Tioga field and new apparatus secured which finally harnessed the wildcat.

The rock pressure was gauged Sunday and showed 400 pounds per square inch, which is considered good for a well that has been allowed to blow free for weeks. Officials of the Penn City Company stated that the well would deliver a volume of more than 1,000,000 cubic feet into a main but this figure is believed to be exceedingly conservative. In addition to this gas which has been caged within the eight-inch casing, there is also a flow coming between the outside of the eight, and the inside of the ten inch that has been estimated all the way from one and a half to four million feet. This the owners hope to eventually brail into field main, but is now blowing free.

This well was started with a twelve-inch casing, and despite the heavy flow of gas that has been coming, the owners were determined to continue to the Oriskany sand. Decision to cap the well was eventually hastened by the company handling compensation, which pointed out that the risk was too great. The friction of the drill in the rock was liable at any time to strike a spark that would cause a great conflagration, putting human life to undue hazard.

The Allen well has been a "stormy petrel" from its inception. It was first started as a ten-inch hole that struck an artesian vein at 100 feet, and after every attempt to case off the water had failed, the derrick was moved about twenty-five feet and a twelve inch hole started. For a time, however, the drillers thought they had only jumped out of the frying pan into the fire, for the same vein of water was picked up, and with it a volume of gas that spouted the water over the top of the 84 foot derrick. The twelve inch casing was sunk into the rock with the expectation that the water could be cut off as the hole continued with a ten. This also proved a fallacy, and drilling inwaterwascontinued to 500 feet when a nine foot strata of hard gas sand was encountered which again brought operations to a halt.

The owners seriously contemplated capping the shaft at this point and calling it a producing well, but were swayed in their decision to continue deeper by the excessive amount expended in starting the well with a twelve inch hole. Ten-inch casing was run that gave the drillers a dry hole in which to go down with eight inch bits. Last Monday the owners were once more astonishel to strike a heavy flow of gas at 860 feet, which kept steady while the drill pounded downward for 400 feet. Another consultation was called, but once more the Penn Ctiy officials held to their determination to test out the Oriskany sand. Drilling had proceeded to a depth slightly less than 1,500 feet when the cable was reeled in for the last time Sunday morning and preparations made to cap the well.

The history of the Allen well has unfolded two thingh little suspected to exist in the vicinity of Addison. A shallow sand has been discovered at 510 feet that looks and acts like the Bradford gas sand, and a gas producing shale has been discovered at 860 feet that closely resembles the long production shales of West Virginia. Either of these finds alone was sufficient to startle the hair-trigger disposition of a gas producer—discovering both in one hole has set them agog from the Atlantic seaboard to Texas. It is freely predicted that this well marks the opening of a third major field that will prove as famous in a short time as the Tioga and Wayne fields, as drilling to 500 or 1000 feet is an inexpensive operation.

"TOO HOT" TO PRINT

Too hot to work, too hot to sleep;
Too hot to rest my burning feet,
Too hot to pray, too hot to swear,
Too hot to do aught, but tear my hair;
Too hot to ride, too hot to walk,
Too hot to do anything, save sit and Gawk;
Too hot to write, too hot to type,
Too hot to smoke my burning old pipe;
Too hot to read, too hot to lounge,
Too hot to stretch out on the ground;
Too hot to whistle, too hot to sing,
Too hot to listen to the radio's din;
Too hot to swim, too hot to dive,
Too hot, oh man, to be alive
Too hot to travel, too hot to roam,
Too hot to head the Ford from home;
Too hot to play tennis, too hot to golf,
Too hot in my hay up in the loft;
Too hot to angle, too hot to fish,
Too hot to scrape ice cream out of a dish;
Too hot to hope, too hot to despair,
Too hot for a royal flush to beat a pair;
Too hot to rain, too hot for a drought
Too hot for any breeze, save from the South;
Too hot to eat chicken, too hot to eat rice,
Too hot to eat anything, save only ice;
Too hot while its light, too hot when it's dark,
Too hot to play pee wee golf down in the park;
Too hot for the robins, too hot for the wren,
Too hot for even the starling to sing;
Too hot for the cattle, too hot for the sheep,
Too hot to cuddle up little Bo Peep;
Too hot for the dog, too hot for the cat,
Too hot for either to bother a rat;
Too hot for a shirt, too hot for pants,
Too hot for B. V. D.'s, save they be scant;
Too hot to live, too hot to die,
Too hot to think of a home on high;
Too hot to make more of this, too hot to stop,
Too hot to climb to bed, too hot to drop;
Too hot for you to read this jingle,
Too hot for Babe Ruth to get a bingle;
Too hot, oh why can't I stop this silly stuff,
Too hot for you to know, if you've got enough;
Too hot to sit with the mercury at ninety-eight,
Too hot to get this to press before too late;
Too hot to hope for a cloud on the sun,
Too hot to finish this so we'll call it done.

A PROMISING PROGRAM

All sorts of people are putting forth all sorts of schemes designed to prevent a recurrence of the industrial depression such as we have been going through. Most of the schemes are merely schemes, put forward by people who do not really know what they are talking about. There seems, however, to be real promise in the suggestion of the National Civic Federation to call a national congress of selected delegates from every line of industry and business, and from the ranks of all the important trades as well, to formulate a program of industrial readjustment and to create a permanent organization to maintain the proper balance between production, distribution and consumption.

The suggestion originated with Matthew Woll, vice-president of the American Federation of Labor, in a letter to James W. Gerard former Ambassador to Germany, who is chairman of the Commission of Industrial Inquiry of the National Civic Federation. Elihu Root, America's most distinguished "elder statesman", is the honorary chairman of the federation.

Under such auspices, any movement for public welfare starts off with a fair chance of success. Every intelligent person knows that all that is needed to keep business and industry on an even keel, and labor steadily employed, is co-operation to that end between all the elements involved. Capital alone cannot do it, management alone cannot do it, labor cannot bring it about. But if all the groups of these three elements of business and industrial life get together and agree on a program, it is pretty likely to be a program which stands a chance of success. Its value will be increased if the farmers are also included. And it will be lessened in precisely the degree in which politicians take part in it.

The advocates of this movement are referring to it is "the Ten-Year Plan". They figure it will take ten years of experiment, trial and error to arrive at a working basis which will be reasonably certain of accomplishing its purpose. If some method could be devised to compel all of the interests involved to live up to their joint agreements there is no reason in the world why something of this sort should not be effective. And, as the gentlemen who are active in promoting the 10-year plan point out, unless intelligent action in this direction is taken, the alternative will be the government stepping in and regulating business, socializing industry in ways which are entirely foreign to the American conception of individual rights and liberties.

PRESS CANNOT BE MUZZLED

A Minnesota law making the publication and circulation of any "malicious, scandalous and defamatory newspaper, magazine or other periodical" a public nuisance, and providing for methods of preventing its publication, has proved to be another good intention gone wrong.

Taking advantage of this law the city police of Minneapolis seized copies of a newspaper, The Saturday Press, that contained an attack upon the Administration of Mayor Kunze, and without any legal authority, proceeded to destroy 30,000 copies of a 40,000 edition.

Of course it never was intended that the law should be used as a club to suppress free speech, even though, as was claimed by the Minnesota authorities, the newspaper was more sensational than useful.

The court held that the Minnesota statute was invalid because it violated constitutional rights. The Justices pointed out that there are laws to regulate the press when it indulges in "malicious defamation", but that public officials and policemen cannot legally destroy a newspaper property without resorting to the processes of law. For these reasons "the gag law" was declared unconstitutional.

SIMPLE RULES FOR DRIVING

While the number of organizations and individuals engaged in safety education of the public increases, the number of automobile accidents also continues to increase.

The United States Government through the National Conference of Street and Highway Safety, state governments through offices of state motor vehicle commissioners, city governments through local chiefs of police and traffic commissioners, the automobile manufacturers through the National Automobile Chamber of Commerce, car owners through the American Automobile Association, the insurance companies, the National Safety Council—the list could be continued almost indefinitely—are all engaged in safety education. And yet the number of automobile accidents increase.

AN HONOR DESERVED

In awarding the Capper Gold Medal and its accompanying honorarium of $5,000 to Dr. L. O. Howard for distinguished service to agriculture, honor is given where honor is due. Dr. Howard, in his long service as chief entomologist of the United States Department of Agriculture, has done more than any other living person, not only to awaken the farmers of the nation to the necessity of combating insect pests, but to develop methods of overcoming the ravages of insects and to set up bars against their entry from abroad.

As Dr. Howard has truthfully said so often that it is an old story, the great war for the possession of the earth is the war between man and insects. Unchecked, insect life would destroy all other life. Great progress has been made in the war on insects in the past forty years, but an enormous amount still remains to be done and only unceasing diligence and unremitting warfare will give the final victory to man.

It is not only the agricultural products that insects threaten; it is human life itself. When Dr. Howard began his research the grasshopper and the Colorado beetle or potato bug were supposed to be the farmer's worst enemies. Neither of them has been completely subdued, and the pink boll weevil still menaces the cotton crop of the south, to say nothing of the Gypsy moth and the San Jose scale, and the hundreds of other familiar agricultural pests. We know that the mosquito is the sole carrier of malaria and yellow fever, that typhus fever and the bubonic plague are carried by fleas and that the common house fly spreads typhoid germs on our food.

In unearthing the facts about insect pests and particularly in developing means of combating them, Dr. Howard has devoted a long and poorly paid career of public service. He is entitled to all the honor that can be paid him.

LIGHTENING FARM TAXES

John A. Vomacka, Minnesota farmer, wrote his representative in Washington recently: "I pay $300 in taxes on my 208-acre farm. At the present price of farm land I am compelled to purchase my farm from the county treasurer once every nine years. In addition I must keep the buildings in repair and insured. I am not really sure whether I am owner or just a tenant. Think it over and see if you can figure out what the future has in store for us."

John Vomacka's problem is not much different from any other farmer's says Editor Tom Cathcart of the Country Home. The tax burden is becoming unbearably heavy to many, and next year's tax will undoubtedly be larger. How can the farmer's load be lightened?

Of late years, Federal, State and local governments have been emulating each other in constantly increasing expenditure. Mr. Cathcart believes that the time has come to turn the tide in the opposite direction, and insist upon reduced expenditures and reduced taxes.

"For example", he says, "the Government can and should stop wasting hundreds of millions. It can and should put a reasonable limit on gifts to veterans. It can and should be thrifty in countless other ways with the taxpayers' money."

But with all this Federal lavishness, it is probably the State and local taxes that the farmer feels most. In many places farmers pay two dollars or three dollars an acre on farm land worth no more than $50 an acre. This is too much, no matter what the price of farm crops is.

Local farm organizations during the coming year are preparing to campaign vigorously against all tax-eating, inefficient duplications of local Government. They will assert that there are too many officials, too many unnecessary units. Probably there are too many counties, too many townships, too many boards and districts. Recently Professor Leland of the University of Chicago estimated that there are 500,000 separate Government units within the United States, all levying and consuming taxes.

SOLVING THE WORLD PROBLEMS

President Hoover's call for a one-year-moratorium of war debts was the most spectacular act of his administration. It had the effect of arousing the first ray of hope for business and industry since the Fall of 1929. The President has the active support of political leaders of all parties and factions, which gives assurance that the United States Congress will be in position to ratify the extension of credit to nations that owe the United States. Right now the European governments are trying to get together to give their own collection agencies a vacation. The probabilities are that this proposal of President Hoover will work out all right.

It is still too early to say that the depression in the United States is "about over" but there seems to be plenty of evidence that a great improvement is under way. The sentiment in Washington political and legislative circles is very hopeful. At least the public morale has been greatly improved. The stock market has taken a big brace and indications point to vastly improved conditions.

FREE RIDES TO SCHOOL

More than one-third of the States enacted laws in the past two years providing for the transportation of pupils to school. This movement is regarded by the Federal Board of Education as part of a widespread and important effort to increase school attendance and promote school efficiency.

SOME STEALING

More than $24,000,000 of insured automobiles were stolen in 1929 according to a study made by a Government committee. This seems to be a pretty good argument in favor of automobile insurance.

New York Life

Old New Yorkers never get tired of watching the unending and varied panorama of the life that flows through the big city's streets. In one block the other day we passed a cripple with both legs entirely gone and a few feet farther on encountered a man of stilts.

The latter stood ten feet tall and halted right in the stream of traffic to read his paper, just as casually as the man on a corner in a village. Of course, a big sign on his coattails told where to buy your clothes.

A Hazardous Occupation

Window washing is one of the most dangerous of all the jobs of modern existence. It is superlatively healthy, like a drink of milk fresh from a cow, but, again like the milk, good only to the last drop.

There is a higher percentage of fatalities among window cleaners than in any other common calling, and yet there are always plenty of applicants for the job. Climbing around on narrow window sills a thousand feet above Broadway does not phase men who have built up to it by working on three and six-story levels.

A Slicker

As the window cleaners work on percentage it is to their advantage to work as fast as possible. Recently one of the companies took on a new man who admitted he knew nothing about the work. He was shown how to make one swipe with the chamois do, in place of the scrubbing the average housewife gives the glass, and aught other tricks of the trade and hen sent out alone on the job.

Right away he began to turn in signed tickets showing he was working a third faster than their best man had done up to then. An inspection of his completed work showed his windows were beautifully cleaned and everybody was satisfied. Finally there came a kick.

"Please don't send that big man around here to clean our windows," the letter read. "He gives us all heart disease climbing on the sills twenty stories up without using the safety belt, and it makes us too nervous to watch him."

And so the secret was learned. He refused to wear the belt because it slowed him up. Come to find out, he used to be a sailor on a deep sea whaler and height and insecure footing meant nothing to him. He was

RISKS

The first reaction of everyone who read about the accident to the submarine "Nautilus" which disabled it while it was cruising on the surface from America to England, was how fortunate it was that this did not occur while the ship was under the Arctic ice.

Perhaps Sir Hubert Wilkins and his crew are not proposing to take any more serious risks than did many of the pioneer aviators. In the case of flying it was fairly easy for anyone, however, to recognize the value of these early experiments if they should prove successful. It is difficult to see any possible value to humanity, or importance to science, in the effort to reach the North Pole by a submarine boat.

It looks, to an impartial observer, as if human life were being risked merely to provide thrills, just as a circus performer provides them.

The Way of Life

Spotlights

I WENT to see Frank Craven's play "That's Gratitude." After the show Mrs. Craven and Grantland Rice took me up to Frank's apartment. Other friends dropped in, and presently Frank himself arrived—genuine, whimsical, modest, totally unspoiled.

Seeing him in his own home made it easier to understand his success. Everything was simple and old-fashioned and sincere. When he writes a play he just picks a situation out of an ordinary American home, and then he walks on the stage and is himself.

On the way home another thought struck me.

He is the author of the play, and his name is printed on the program and written in front of the theatre in electric lights.

Yet it is a play without a star.

At least five other characters are just as important as he is. He is on the stage no more than they are, and they are given just as many good lines.

He might have written the piece so as to monopolize the spot light, and it might have been a success or it might have been a flop. But being the sort of chap he is, he is content to be in the background a good share of the time. His royalties will reward his good sense.

Years ago Cameron McKensie wrote a short story entitled, "The Man Who Was It." The story told about a business that had been making good profits for many years. The president took life very easy. He played golf, travelled in Europe, and let the boys assume responsibility.

After his death a young and very efficient executive was brought in, who decided that everything needed tightening up. When the purchasing agent was about to sign a big contract, the new Boss jumped into the negotiations himself. When the sales manager had a large order to close, the Boss said: "I'll pack my bag and go with you." When the production manager made plans for rearranging the plant, the Boss revised his plans. He worked about twenty hours a day, and was always criticising his predecesor who had seemed to work so little.

The result was that his associates, being robbed of both responsibility and credit, lay back and let him do it. He worked himself into a nervous breakdown, and the business went on the rocks.

I am told that the Jesuits had this motto: "A great deal of good can be done in the world if one is not too careful who gets the credit."

Wise leaders recognize this golden principle and profit by it. The foolish hog the spotlight, and frequently go to smash.

International Sunday School Lesson for July 5

THE GIFT OF THE HOLY SPIRIT

Acts 1:6-9; 2:;—8

Rev. Samuel D. Price, D.D.

During the next six months the lessons will be in the Acts and the Epistles. Jesus set forth principles pertaining to the kind of a life that He said should be lived. The Acts of the Apostles demonstrate that such a life is possible. In His ascension to heaven there was a conscious loss to His followers, but He had promised them that a wonderful experience would come to them, and in preparation for this event directed that they should abide ten days in prayer.

The place was probably the room where the Passover had been observed and the Lord's Supper instituted. Many think that this was the home of Mary's, the mother of John Mark. All the apostles were present during those days and in addition many who were aggressive followers of Jesus. All did not understand the fullness of teaching which the Master had presented. Some were still looking for the erection of a visible kingdom that would overthrow the power of hated Rome.

On the day called Pentecost the dispensation of the Holy Spirit began. There were spiritual and visible signs, described in the lesson text. These manifestations are mere incidents compared with the divine power evidenced in the preaching of Peter, who explained how prophecy was being fulfilled in their midst. The sublime truth of the Trinity of the Godhead is evidenced. Christ was declared in the Old Testament and His life was known in the Gospels. Even so, the Holy Spirit, though always present, came into special relationship with man on that day of Pentecost. His ministry is to make the work of the sons of God effective.

TODAY AND TOMORROW

FRANK PARKER STOCKBRIDGE

RADIODYNAMICS

That is the word coined by John Hays Hammond, Jr., and now accepted by the patent office and Congress, to mean the control of energy at a distance by means of radio.

Hammond began to experiment with radiodynamics when he was a student in Yale in 1909. He invented a method of controlling a boat on the surface of the water and a torpedo under the surface by radio impulses, as well as steering an airplane over a long course without a pilot on board.

This is something quite different from transmitting power by radio. Only enough power can be transmitted to set a piece of machinery in motion or stop it. The machinery must have its own independent power plant. The day may come when actual power can be sent through the air, but that is a long way in the future.

SPORTS

Interest in collegiate football is declining, the Carnegie Foundation for the Advancement of Teaching reports.

There is a very decided difference between sports participated in by students for the benefit of the students themselves, for the maintenance of their health and the upbuilding of their morale and sports undertaken as a means of advertising particular colleges or of making money.

Nobody is suggesting that all intercollegiate sporting contests should be abolished, but it is certainly true that public interest in them is declining, and it is probable that they will play a less important part in college life in the future than in the past.

ROCKETS

Professor Robert H. Goddard of Clark University, who has been experimenting with and talking about propelling aircraft by means of rockets, has taken out patents on a rocket-propelled airplane. The plane is expected to rise from the ground like any other plane, its propellers being turned by a turbine engine, for which the gas from a succession of rockets will furnish the power. When it gets into the rarified upper atmosphere the engine will be cut off and the propulsive force will be that of the rockets themselves.

Prof. Goldard is no idle visionary. Just what he has got in his desert laboratory in New Mexico he is not telling the world as yet, but if anyone in this country is going to succeed in flying by means of rockets Prof. Goddard will probably be the first.

PIGEONS

A blue homing pigeon flew 503½ miles from Salisbury, N. C., to New York City, in 13 hours, 11 minutes and 51 seconds the other day. This was not quite a record for the 500 mile annual pigeon race, but it comes very close to it.

A large part of a homing pigeon's time in flying long distances, however, is taken up in the bird's questing, or circuling at high altitudes to find landmarks to guide it back to its home loft. There is no longer any great mystery about how the homing pigeon finds its way back to its home nest. The bird has no mysterious sixth sense or homing instinct. It cannot find its way home at night or in a dense fog or conditions of low visibility. Like almost all birds, however, it has telescopic powers of vision beyond anything which human beings can easily imagine, according to Dr. Casey Wood, famous oculist, who has devoted many years to the study of the eyes of birds. The homing pigeon memorizes landmarks near its home loft, and, as it is given longer and longer flight trials, it learns the lay of the land at greater distances, until it knows the country so well that, when liberated within 500 miles from home on a clear day, it can see some remembered landmark in the direction of its home.

Cheap Sensationalism Forecasts Disbandment of Social Structure

(By J. W. H. de Belleville)

New York, June 8.—If one were to take seriously the outgivings of some of our writers, politicians and irrepressible business men, one would believe that the end of the world is at hand. Society is about to disband; civilization is going under; and the great experiment, which is humanity, ends in failure. No other conclusion is possible. To these depths have we sunk in the mire of our own pessimism. We are in a slough of despond from which we cannot extricate ourselves. National and international conferences are being held in the vain hope that someone will offer a solution, but none is offered. If anyone dares to utter a word of cheer, his voice is drowned by the chorus of croakers who are positive that everything is going to the demnition bow-wows. Anyone who thinks differently is not worth listening to. And all this because the world happens to be passing through, at the moment, a rather serious business depression.

These are the same persons who, two years ago, were telling us that there was no limit to the peak of prosperity that this country would reach. Improved machinery would lighten the laborer's toil and increase his wages more and more until every luxury would be within his reach and poverty become a think of the past. Now, just what has happened since then? Is science dead? Are all the great inventors stricken with paralysis? Has a great earthquake destroyed our almost countless factories and laid low our wonderful cities with their towering tripods beckoning to the clouds and, at evening, radiating a challenge to the stars? Has it destroyed at one swoop the finest system of railroads the world ever dreamed of? Has the sun dried up the Mississippi and the Great Lakes? Do the heavens deny us their precious moisture? Has our soil lost its fertility? No; none of this is to be recounted by the harbingers of woe. The only thing that has happened, apparently, is that quite a few people have lost their nerve.

When we can find nothing better to do we conjure up spectres like the Russian industrial menace which, it is predicted, in a few years will lay our own vast industrial fabric in ruins. This is to be accomplished by a five-year or 10-year plan which is designed to impoverish the entire world outside of Russia. But it should occur to some of these prophets of disaster that if this is the purpose of the Soviet leaders, they must be the prize imbeciles of the business world, and in that case neither the United States nor any other nation has anything to fear from them.

It is hard to imagine any concern starting out with the avowed purpose of destroying first of all the purchasing power of the only people to whom it can hope to sell its goods. For Russia can sell no merchandise to its own people. They are the slaves who must produce and in return be satisfied with a bare existence. Sure enough, they can supply themselves, perhaps, in time, with everything they require and so become self-sustaining and independent of other sources, but the rest of us need not on this account prepare for doomsday. It will be easier for the civilized world, whenever the time arrives, to get along without Russia than for Russia to get along without the civilized world.

There is a German proverb which says that it is provided that the trees shall not grow to the skies. Just as surely as the Soviet Government creates a condition that will cause the other nations to unite against her in an agreement to throttle her dumping campaign, just so surely will she bring her own industrial house of cards tumbling about her ears. There is only one way in which she can get along. She must learn to behave herself commercially; and in this direction she still has a long road to travel.

Doubtless great harm has been done by the publication of sensational articles which greatly exaggerate the menace of the five-year plan. There is no legerdemain that will convert novices into experts over-night. The Russian dictatorship cannot reach in five years the industrial efficiency which in such nations as Great Britain and the United States has required several generations. A vast industrial fabric cannot be constructed by a mathematical formula. It requires huge armies of skilled workers with long years of experience in handling the complicated machinery of modern industry. Already there are signs of collapse in the execution of the plan, and unless the day of miracles has returned, it is certain that there are many headaches in store for the Soviet industrial leaders.

When the Russian bugbear loses its sensational appeal, the industrious newspaper writers turn their attention to their favorite sport of baiting the President. He is responsible, of course, for the world-wide depression. Some of them apparently would have us believe that he deliberately planned it. It could all have been avoided if the Administration had abolished the tariff, adopted free-trade and recommended an appropriation of a billion dollars for the Red Cross and another billion for the unemployed.

The importers, the international bankers and the doctrinaire economists are sure that the tariff is all wrong. But it appears that the percentage of trade which the United States is now getting from our principal foreign markets is about the same as it has been for the past decade. Our volumne is of course, greatly decreased due to the depression everywhere but so long as our various customers give us our usual percentage of their business we certainly cannot lay the decline in our exports to any discrimination against us because of increased duties. Moreover, the customs records show that the principal declines in our imports have occurred in merchandise which pays no duty and which, therefore, could not be affected by the tariff.

To suggest further tinkering with the tariff is to invite certain disaster. The fear of such a calamity will be sufficient to sound the death-knell of Democratic hopes in the next national campaign.

Newspaper stories, whose only purpose is to provide a cheap sensation, and editorial comment, stupidly conceived for partisan advantage, serve only to retard recovery. The power of the press is a deadly weapon when it is used without regard for the general welfare.

This Week in Washington

BY RADFORD MOBLEY
AUTOCASTER WASHINGTON BUREAU

Washington, D. C., June 22.—There is no longer any question in the minds of political gossipers here as to who is the leading candidate for the Democratic nomination for President in 1932. Franklin D. Roosevelt, Governor of New York, is much more strongly entrenched in the lead today than Al Smith was at this time four years ago, while his position is a thousand times better than that of Woodrow Wilson in 1911.

No attempt has been made to try and line up delegates for the big convention this far in advance, although Governor Roosevelt's "non-political" visit to Ex-Governor Cox of Ohio, the 1920 candidate when Roosevelt ran in second place on the ticket, and to George White, the present governor, drew the statement from Mr. Cox that he would be glad to support Roosevelt for the nomination, while Mr. White proved more than friendly to Roosevelt.

What the hot weather prophets look upon as the greatest boost for the New York governor is the public announcement by Col. Edward Mandell House that he wants Roosevelt to run and will be glad to do anything to further his prospects. If Col. House should be made Roosevelt's campaign manager it will mean that the Republicans will have to extend themselves to win. House's support of Wilson proved the turning point in the war president's career, and Wilson's victory was largely due to the astute politics played by the man from Texas. Col. House, in his statement, declares if Roosevelt is defeated for the nomination, he will back Newton D. Baker as his second choice.

In many ways Col. House is the most powerful politician in the Dercratic ranks, if not in the entire country. A millionaire, he has shown not the slightest desire for political preferment for himself, declining the highest offices in the gift of President Wilson He is a politician out of sheer love for the game. Although 73 years old he is wiry and active and can hold his own with much younger men, physically.

Col. House is a "dry," politically, but is well liked by the "wets" for his stand against national prohibition. He is believed to have inspired Wilson's famous letter in which he declared that prohibition was a local question and should be kept out of national politics. Roosevelt, while a dry personally, holds the same position as Wilson on liquor, that it is not a matter for the Federal Government but a purely local question.

Being a dry has not been easy for Col. House. The Democrats of Texas split wide open years ago on the liquor question and it needed all of Col. House's astuteness to pull victory out of the fire caused by the gaps made in his fences by the question. If he handles Roosevelt's campaign it will be up to him to manouevre so that the wets and drys of his party can find a common basis on which to work for the success of the national ticket. "moist plank" will have to be explained very carefully to Southern Democrats but, if anyone can make them adopt such a plank, it is felt that Col. House is that man.

Washington gossips believe that John J. Raskob's effort to "put over" Al Smith again is already a failure, and that Governor Ritchie of Maryland, an out-and-out wet, right now is Roosevelt's leading opponent for the nomination. His stand on liquor is felt to be against him, much as he is liked personally. At the present moment, close students of politics can see nothing but a race between Hoover and Roosevelt in the 1932 presidential campaign and the New Yorker, with the prestige of following exactly in Wilson's footsteps as far as the liquor question is concerned, and the advantage of having the same sponsor as Wilson, is in a most powerful position, even his opponents say.

Woodrow Wilson has been dead seven years and it is ten years since he left the White House to become a private citizen. In those years his enemies have exhausted their vituperations and the real Wilson is beginning to emerge as a popular figure. Lincoln was only a Republican idol until some forty years ago, when the whole country began to understand that he belonged to all parties and his true greatness began to be appreciated. Wilson's memory is undergoing the same process and the coming campaign may see his name used with that of Jefferson, for the purpose of conjuring votes for Roosevelt.

PROGRESS

New York was the last city in America to abandon the old-fashioned horse-drawn street cars, the last of which ran up to a couple of years ago. But it is the first large city to abolish the steam locomotive.

All passenger trains entering New York City from any direction have been drawn by electric locomotives for several years. Steam engines are still used for hauling freight trains on the West side of Manhattan Island, and in parts of Brooklyn, as well as on Staten Island, where the Baltimore & Ohio has its port terminals. But the last steam locomotive is to be taken off Manhattan Island this summer.

It is exactly 100 years since the first steam-drawn passenger train ran on a railroad in America. There were railroads, with horses to draw the cars, for a hundred years before that. There will still be railroads a hundred years from now, but the method of running trains may be something we of today do not dream of, any more than our great-grandfathers dreamed of electric motors. Perhaps air-propellers driven by Diesel-type engines will pull the fast freight from New York to Frisco in a day on high elevated tracks in 2031. Perhaps some means of propulsion by rockets will be used. All we can be sure of is that the speed will be greater.

Unemployment Situation Advances Building Schedule of New Christian Science Publishing House

BOSTON, Mass.—Continued growth of the activities of The Christian Science Publishing Society has necessitated expanded facilities. To meet this condition The Christian Science Board of Directors of The Mother Church, The First Church of Christ, Scientist, in Boston, Massachusetts, will erect, as soon as plans and arrangements are completed, a new Publishing House.

Here provision will be made for the needs of The Christian Science Monitor, The Christian Science Journal, the Christian Science Sentinel and all other literature published by the Society.

The new building, which will cost in the neighborhood of $3,000,000, will occupy approximately 53,000 square feet of ground bounded by Massachusetts Avenue, Norway, Falmouth and Clearway Streets, Back Bay. Operations are to be hastened in accord with the public and private building program which Mayor James M. Curley of Boston has been urging in conjunction with President Hoover's recommendations for relief of unemployment.

The structure will have a varying height. The Massachusetts Avenue end of the building, which will be used for offices, will be nine stories in height, while that part which is opposite The Mother Church edifice will be three and four stories in height and in scale with this edifice.

The publishing building will be related in architectural style to The Mother Church, and its design has been influenced by the fact that in the future it probably will become one of a group of buildings which will surround and form a fitting architectural setting for the Church. It will be an all-stone building of the Italian Renaissance type, the lower story to be of granite and the upper stories of limestone.

Special attention will be given to the installation of modern heating and ventilating devices. The central plant will be housed in a building adapted to it, with an ornamental tower inclosing the stack, the tower to be of brick and stone conforming with the beauty and symmetry of the main building.

The building now occupied by The Christian Science Publishing Society, completed in 1908, will be used for the administration offices of The Mother Church.

The architect is Chester Lindsay Churchill, and with him is associated Lockwood-Greene Engineers, Inc., of Boston, which will have charge of the plant layout.

No More False Alams At The Addison Bank

The burglar alarm on the Addison Bank, which for the past week or two has been clanging false alarms at a disturbing rate, has finally been fixed. A representative of the manufacturing company which puts out these alarms was in Addison yesterday to discover the cause of the false alarms. A short was found and the apparatus restored to working order.

After the alarm staged its two o'clock concert last Thursday morning a field man came here to look over the woring, but could find nothing amiss. Still the alarm kept ringing at sundry and unseasonable hours and the local bank officials became both annoyed and worried for fear some attempt might be made to burglarize the institution, and like the boy who called "wolf, wolf", when there was no wolf, serious harm might come. The short in the wiring of the vault was discovered quite by accident yesterday, after the factory man had checked it over and found nothing amiss. The inspector happened to be standing near as Mr. Foland, vice-president of the bank, moved the lever to the vault and at that instant the alarm started ringing. Investigation showed that the short was in a small wire concealed in the jamb of the door. This had been taped, but a tiny shred of wire almost invisible to the eye protruded through the tape, and the jar of the moving lever brought this in contact.

It is now believed that the jar occasioned by a passing truck has

Two Hard Games Over Week-end

Addison Plays at Elkland July 4th And Knoxville Comes Here Sunday, July 5th

The Addison Tri-County Leaguers will have a busy week end this week. On Saturday, July 4th, they will play Elkland at Elkland and on Sunday, July 5th, Knoxville will play here. Much depends on these two games. Addison is tied with Elkland and three other teams for second place in the League and a victory over them will give Addison the jump for the present. Elkland will undoubtedly send Freburg to the mound, but Addison just dotes on left handed flinging at present. Ripley, the local southpaw ace, will do the flinging for Addison. Hewson will probably not be able to be here and D. Grange will be at third, with the regular outfield. Orr pulled a tendon in his leg Sunday and was obliged to retire. He may not be able to play this week end. A big delegation from Addison will accompany the locals over the hill and there will be something doing.

Sunday the rejuvenated Knoxville team makes their first visit of the year to Tuscarora Field and are sure to give a good account of themselves. They now have a fine young team with a first class pitcher in Rock Clark, who is sure to pitch against Addison. They have a strong infield in Jimmie Warren and his brother Arthur on the left side and Red Huyler and Kelts on the right. Grange will pitch this game for Addison and from his form against Wellsboro last Sunday should show the visitors some pitching. Both games will be called at 3 P. M. By winning both of these games Addison will not be far from the top of the heap in the Tri-County League.

The standings at present are as follows:

	Won	Lost	Pct.
Galeton	5	2	.714
Addison	4	3	.571
Elkland	4	3	.571
Westfield	4	3	.571
Wellsboro	4	3	.571
Blossburg	4	3	.571
Coudersport	2	5	.285
Knoxville	1	6	.142

TOO MUCH LIFE

(By Bob Adams)

Cucumber beetles, most of whom wear convict stripes, are a plague to the honest gardener. They not only chew up the young leaves of cucumbers, muskmelons and squash but they carry from plant to plant the bacillus of wilt and the virus of mosaic.

What to do? Well you can screen the plants while they are young but that is quite a task. It is hard to kill cucumber beetles but comparatively easy to declare a moratorium on the golden rule and chase them into a neighbor's garden. Here is how. Take a piece of cheesecloth, spread it out and pile on it a mixture of hydrated lime fifteen parts and calcium arsenate one part. Now pick up the cloth in such a way as to form a temporary bag and shake the stuff lightly over the leaves of cucumber, melon, or what have you. Lightly, mind you, because too much lime may stunt the growth of your vines.

VERY LATEST by Mary Marshall

Cocardes is the French term for cockades, a trimming device that is in favor right now with milliners. Cockades were first worn by military men in Europe, who enjoyed a monopoly of them for centuries. In recent years they have been adopted, along with many other men's fashions, by women, whose smartest hats are decorated with them this year.

For a small black cocarde you will need a small circle of black canvas a little smaller than the size you have chosen for your finished ornament—about two inches in diameter. The ribbon should not be more than an inch wide for the type of cocarde shown in the sketch. Black grosgrain or taffeta ribbon should be chosen. Lay it in narrow flat pleats and baste them down and then press under a damp cloth. Fasten three rows of pleating on the canvas base, sewing down the outside row first lapping the lower edge of the pleats to fit the circle.

A flat knot of ribbon may be placed in the center to hide the inner pleating. There should be two ends of the ribbon attached to the lower side of the cocarde in the traditional manner.

The new way of placing the cocarde is just under the brim of the hat at the left side with the ends of the ornament falling coquettishly over the eye.

HUMOROUS CLASSIC IS RADIO PLAY FEATURE

The days when mule-drawn barges were just disappearing from the American scene and the old folks feared automobiles as dangerous "contraptions" will be recalled for the radio audience when Arthur Allen, as Captain William Sparr, goes on the air Tuesday night (June 9) in "A Good Car for the Money," the Soconyland Playlet of the evening.

Based on a story by Leonard H. Robbins, this radio feature, which will be heard from Station WEAF at 7:30 P. M., (E. D. T.), takes the hearer back to the banks of the Morritan Canal, where Captain Sparr, his faithful mule Cora, and the barge, the Belle of Ashland, are in the habit of traveling four miles a day by water. The closing of the canal robs Captain Sparr of his life work, and before long he invests in an automobile, which terrifies him, his family and a large part of the populace.

Captain Sparr's crony, George Griggs, will be played by Parker Fennelly, another popular Soconyland player.

The playlet is in two parts of which this is the first, The second section of it will be given June 16.

CHOOSE SAUCEPANS THAT HEAT QUICKLY

Aluminum cooking utensils are especially good for cooking on top of the stove, says the New York state college of home economics at Cornell University, because aluminum conducts heat quickly from the stove to the food. Aluminum is particularly suitable for waterless cookery. Iron kettles are good for long cooking but iron takes longer to heat, and is heavy and subject to rust. Iron makes a good skillet.

Glass and earthenware utensils are best for oven cooking as they absorb more heat than the others do. Enameled ware is a close second. Dull, dark colored surfaces absorb heat; shiny surfaces reflect it.

Glass and earthenware are excellent for baking dishes, as they not only absorb heat well but hold it for a long time and food cooked in such dishes may be served in them. When buying earthenware, get the kind which does not crackle, because, after crackling, the dish absorbs grease and may become unsanitary.

Enameled ware which absorbs radiated heat, is particularly good for roasters. It should be handled carefully to prevent chipping and it should not be placed dry over direct heat.

Before putting silver away for the summer, it should be washed, polished, and placed in flannel.

ROWENA RIDES THE RUMBLE

COPYRIGHT 1931 BY THE AUTHOR

by ETHEL HUESTON

FIRST INSTALMENT

The whole trouble lay with Peter. —Peter Blande.—He was the fly in the ointment, the blot on the escutcheon, the carbon knock in the motor. Things just couldn't possibly have worked out more to Rowena's fancy, except for the persistent presence of Peter. And there was absolutely no hope of getting rid of him—he was too deeply mixed up in everything.

To tell the truth, it was Peter's project in the first place. Rowena herself only got into it at the last minute in answer to an advertisement in the morning paper. It was Peter who put the ad in.

Peter was a commercial artist, one of those thrice unfortunates with a soul for art, a talent for paint and a need for more ready money. He spent his days painting trees, rocks and running brooks, dotted here and there with pretty girls, Algonquin anglers and Broadway golfers, as a background for the Rackruff Roadster, 1931 model, comprising fully half the picture.

It was Peter who conceived the exquisite idea of a Rackruff motor tour across country with the well-known artist, Peter Blande, at the wheel. He figured—and converted Mr. Rack, President, and Mr. Ruff, Secretary and Treasurer, to his figures—that it would be the pinnacle of publicity to conduct such a tour, with pauses at all points of prime interest for him to paint a picture of the Rackruff roadster poised on the brink of a precipice, pulling its way pluckily out of a volcano, skidding securely off a racing glacier, or defying the sands of the desert.

Peter said—and Messrs. Rack and Ruff agreed with him—it would be good business to take a copy-writer along in the car to feature the high lights of the trip and apply the proper adjectives both to landscape and motor, in this way insuring a maximum of newspaper publicity that would establish the new roadster once and for all in the motor mind of America.

So Peter advertised for a copy-writer.

"Wanted:" read the advertisement in the morning papers. "A pretty woman who can write. One who has had some experience and met with reasonable success. Must be free to leave the city. Expenses paid and moderate salary. Must be good-looking. Apply Rackruff Salesrooms to-day."

Rowena Rostand was one of many women who read the advertisement over her breakfast that morning. It wasn't much of a breakfast in Rowena's case, for she was extremely hard up. She had given up a newspaper position in Ohio in order to be in New York.

It was at eight-thirty that she saw the advertisement. By nine o'clock she was ready to set out for the Rackruff salesrooms. Surveying herself in the mirror she was obliged to admit fairly that in spite of the little thinning of her face, in spite of the dark circles with which anxiety had shadowed her eyes, she was still undeniably good-looking.

Her black and white ensemble was freshly sponged and pressed—Rowena herself had seen to that—her ruffled white blouse was smart in spite of the worn spots here and there. Her black and white shoes were spotless, the fingers of her gloves neatly mended. The collar of her silk coat shone from countless pressings.

"Pick out the best-looking one," Mr. Rack began when the secretary announced the applicants were outside.

"Don't you think," interposed Peter neatly, in his mild, ingratiating drawl, "that you had better look them over yourself? After all, nobody can visualize a lovely face and figure behind the wheel of a Rackruff roadster as you can, you know."

Mr. Rack thought that was a particularly good idea. He called in Mr. Ruff to assist, allowing Peter also to sit by, and had the secretary usher them in, one at a time. And he and Mr. Ruff frowned over them, and asked about their literary efforts, and noticed their eyes and ankles and complexions, jotting down indecipherable comments on their memorandum pads.

The secretary, having some notion of dramatic sequence, saved Rowena for the last. Rowena was so lovely that at first they would not believe she was a writer at all and she had to show them a copy of her book and some of her signed stories in magazines. Rowena's hair was a curious chameleon shimmer of gold and bronze and brown. Her eyes were limpid pools of light that swam now blue, now green, and in gentle moments softened to hazel.

"I'm Rowena Rostand," she said, looking at them straightforwardly. "I am twenty-five years old. I have had one book published and it was so good that practically nobody read it. I worked on a newspaper for three years and I've had eleven stories published in first-class magazines. And you may not think I'm so very good-looking, but lots of people do."

Rackruff Motors, Inc., in the persons of Messrs. Rack and Ruff, thought so, too. Even Peter nodded his approval.

And so Rackruff Motors, Inc., bound itself by written agreement to finance a motor tour for a party consisting solely of a beautiful young writer twenty-five years old and a commercial artist of thirty years and the opposite sex.

Rowena and Peter were called in for a conference early the next morning, and Mr. Rack, ably seconded by Mr. Ruff, put it up to them bluntly. Somebody had blundered, everybody had blundered, if it came to that. An insurmountable difficulty had been encountered.

"There are no insurmountable difficulties," Rowena said sweetly.

The whole enterprise was deadlocked, plans were checkmated, contracts were canceled. The way Mr. Rack put it, with the full accord of Mr. Ruff, it seemed pretty hopeless. Peter quite wilted under the deadly finality of it all.

"Unless," he suggested tentatively, "we advertise again and get an older author, maybe a married one—I suppose a little less good-looking would be better under the circumstances—would attract less attention."

"But you signed me," protested Rowena quickly. "If you try to put any one else in my place, I'll get out an injunction and tie up everything."

Rowena's eyes at that moment were a clear, cold, business blue. Not one of them doubted for a moment that she would do just as she threatened.

Mr. Rack threw out his hands despairingly. "Well, it's off, that's all," he declared.

And Mr. Ruff nodded his head.

Peter seemed cowed into acquiescence. But Rowena was never one to be cowed into acquiescence. She laughed brightly.

"Why, my dears," she said, "it doesn't make the least bit of difference. This is a business trip. I am a professional writer. Mr. Blande is a professional artist. We are thrown together in a purely business capacity, and our ages and sexes have nothing whatsoever to do with it. Nobody thinks anything of a man spending eight hours a day locked into four walls with his stenographer. Certainly an author and an artist riding the public highways in an open car are far safer."

Unfortunately for Rowena, however, Messrs. Rack and Ruff continued to object. Even Peter did. They made all due allowance for Rowena's purity of purpose and nobility of nature, but Rackruff Motors, Inc., said Mr. Rack, stood firm for the conventions.

"Of course, if you feel like that," Rowena said cheerfully, "Mr. Blande and I will be guided entirely by your wishes. We will have to get a chaperon; that's all."

"We wouldn't care about paying the expenses of a third party," said Mr. Ruff quickly.—Mr. Ruff was Treasurer of the Company.

"It will not be necessary," said Rowena. "We will take a lady with us who will be glad to make the tour for her transportation, paying her own living expenses en route."

"Can you find such a person?" asked Mr. Rack.

"Certainly," said Rowena brightly. "Leave everything to me."

"What are you going to do?" asked Peter.

"The same thing you did. Advertise!"

So they went down the street to the nearest Childs' and figured out an advertisement that seemed to suit their purpose.

"Wanted: Young woman to serve as companion on extensive motor tour of the United States. Transportation provided, but must pay own living expenses."

Peter wanted to put in something about a pleasant disposition being an asset, but Rowena said it would be useless—said all women thought they had good dispositions.

"You advertised for a good-looking author, didn't you? And did you see the mob that answered?—We'll have to trust her disposition to luck. Besides, she'll be in the rumble seat—we won't see much of her."

They received a great many answers to the advertisement and Peter went down to her snug, one-room apartment to assist in making the selection. This proved not difficult.

The letter chosen was written on plain creamy paper of very fine quality.

"I am twenty-three years old, a college graduate, and can pay my own expenses unless you plan to travel on a very deluxe scale. I can start at any time and stay as long as you like. The only thing I am really interested in is to go—and go at once. I enclose references."

The name was Roberta Lowell.

The references were good so Rowena got the number on the telephone, with Peter standing interestedly by, and talked to Roberta Lowell.

"She has a nice voice," she whispered to Peter.

Miss Lowell said she could start on Monday morning, that she could get all of her traveling equipment in one suitcase and a small traveling bag, and that she had an allowance of twenty-five dollars a week.

"Wait a minute." Rowena put her hand over the transmitter. "She can spend twenty-five a week," she said to Peter.

"Well, that ought to be enough," said Peter. "Except for the car, I'm hoping to get along on less."

Miss Lowell said she would meet them, bag and baggage, at the Rackruff show-room at ten o'clock Monday morning without fail, and she thought it was going to be great fun.

"Oh, by the way, Miss Lowell——"

"Oh, please don't call me Miss Lowell. Call me Bobby. Everybody calls me Bobby. Miss Lowell is so stiff."

"Well, by the way, Bobby Lowell," went on Rowena, "you'll have to ride in the rumble seat."

"I don't care," was the brave retort, "I'll be willing to ride a cowcatcher to get out of New York and get out quick."

Now Rowena did not like artists. She said they were so abstract. Rowena herself was extremely concrete. She felt, in her heart of hearts, that it was a shame that such a heavenly opportunity to go places, see things, meet people—and best of all, make money doing it!—had to be all messed up with an artist like Peter. Even Rowena, however, could see that she couldn't very well get rid of him—not under the circumstances. If only she and the Roberta girl could go alone now—ah, there would be a travel tale worth the telling. And how they would photograph, the two of them, in the snappy 1931 Rackruff roadster! The publicity they would get!

Mindful that there would be photographers to record their departure from the Rackruff Salesrooms—the Publicity Department was taking care of all that!—Rowena took extreme pains with her appearance that Monday morning, and that was an unusual thing with Rowena.

When she presented herself at the Rackruff show-room at ten o'clock on Monday morning, Messrs. Rack and Ruff had good reason to congratulate themselves on their choice of author. Photographers and reporters were alike enchanted. A girl like that, now, swinging along the Rocky Mountains in a Rackruff roadster—ah, there was publicity made to your order. And it was all Peter's idea, too.

Professor Spencer Says Surplus Is Always With N. Y. Dairymen

Some surplus milk is always with us; and the total supply of milk available for market should always be a little greater than the actual sales of milk and cream. This is necessary to allow for variations in supply and demand, explains Professor Leland Spencer of the New York state college of agriculture. If the minimum daily supply each month just equalled the maximum demand, there would be a surplus of at least ten per cent, due to variations in production and sales during the month, he says.

The milk supply varies from day to day because of weather conditions and other causes. Even the customary late milking on Sunday boosts plant receipts that day and cuts Monday's below the weeks average. The demand changes from day to day because of temperature, the day of the week, holidays, and vacations. Production and sales come closest together in November with the greatest chance of shortage the week before Thanksgiving.

Cooperative Holds Price

On the New York milkshed production is highest in June and lowest in November. The increase from November to June is nearly 100 per cent, but sales of milk and cream increase but forty per cent in the same period. This increase in surplus tends to weaken the fluid market, sometimes out of all proportion to its volume. With butter now worth twenty-four cents a pound wholesale in New York City, only eighty cents a hundred can come from milk sold in this form. Inspected cream at $20 can bring but a dollar a hundred for milk. This is where organization counts. There is little doubt, says Professor Spencer, that the retail price of milk in New York City is two cents a quart higher because dairymen have an effective organizattion. Such an organization commands cooperation of distributors and it provides for the orderly disposal of surplus by classified prices and pooling.

Same History of Surplus

During the World War, and for about two years following, surplus milk was handled by the condensaries at satisfactory prices. In 1920, canned milk purchases fell off and many condensaries planned to close. The Dairymen's League began to function and adopted the classified price plan whereby milk was sold condensaries at prices they could afford to pay. In 1927 condensaries used nearly seventy per cent of the surplus milk. Since then an increasing amount has been used as frozen cream and fresh cream sold to ice cream manufacturers. An increased amount of inspected milk is now used for cheese but the condensaries are gradually passing out of the picture.

Wide difference in production is found in the New York milk shed due to location, soils, and climate. In Orange and Dutchess counties, and others, most of the cows freshen in the fall and give most milk in the winter. Many of the northern counties make little milk in the winter for most of the cows freshen in the spring; but since cheese factories have closed there is a tendency for more fall freshening. Many of these counties and Delaware have good summer and late fall pastures.

Geography Complicates Problem

Such differences in natural conditions make the problem of adjusting seasonal production more difficult on the New York milkshed than in most other markets, he says. Much information is needed about the freshening dates in different districts, and the effect of the time of freshening on the amount and cost of milk. The college of agriculture, the Dairymen's League, and other agencies, are collecting such information. Price differentials to encourage more even production have already been established in some upstate markets. But whatever plan is adopted, Professor Spencer says, should depend on whether it is profitable for individual dairymen to make such changes in their practices as will result in a better balanced supply for the whole market.

The November supply has been more than adequate for the past two years and will probably continue for the next two or three years, because more young cows are coming into the New York herds. The present, low price is due to the failure to keep production properly adjusted to demand. But this problem is receiving more careful study than ever before to minimize both surpluses and shortage and to keep prices on an even keel.

4-H CLUB MEMBERS FACE MICROPHONE

Many of the delegates to the 4-H club congress will have a new experience when they face the microphone of WEAI during the week of June 29 to July 2. Club members from ten New York counties are scheduled to broadcast on the regular noon-day program.

Dorothea Fairman of Ontario county gives two violin solos on Monday; and she is followed by a musical program by a club group from Ulster county. On Tuesday, the Chenango county 4-H band, the only such band in the state, plays several selections and then H. L. Case, the Chenango county 4-H club agent, explains how the band was organized. Marie Molvick of Otsego county, gives two piano solos on the Tuesday program.

Helen O'Brien plays the piano, and Elsie Beck sings Danish songs, as Otsego county's contribution on Wednesday. Mrs. Mabel Caldwell, president of the junior extension board in Schenectady county, tells the value of 4-H club work to a community. A trio from Delaware county gives some ukulele selections and Gordon Cairns, also from Delaware county, tells how to exhibit calves. Robert Booth of St. Lawrence plays the cornet and James Regan sings. The Wednesday program, entirely by club members, closes with a talk by Robert Booth of Washington county, and selections by the St. Lawrence quartette.

One of the clubs entered in the singing contest starts the Thursday program, which is also entirely by club members. Helen Ferry of Broome county tells of 4-H Club recreation and is followed by a musical program from the same county. Emily Watts of Jefferson county tells of her club experiences. Dorthea Wolf of Nassau county gives a violin solo and her selection is followed by several short talks by other Nassau county delegates.

If the smallest daily milk supply equalled the greatest daily demand there would be a milk surplus of at least ten per cent in a month, due to variations in production and sales.

FARM AND HOME DAY AT STATE FAIR

Tuesday, September 8th has been designated as Farm and Home Bureau day at the State Fair this year. This year the state fair committee is again offering prizes for attendance of Farm and Home Bureau members on this special day. Last year both the grand prize and the district prize was won by Broome county.

If you are planning a day at the state fair be sure to go on Tuesday, the regular attractions are just as good on this day and arrangements are made for speakers of special interest to Farm and Home Bureau folks.

In order that an actual count be kept, each county Farm and Home Bureau member and their families are urged to be sure to register at the several booths located about the grounds. The main booth will be at Mrs. Miller's office in the Agricutural Building where the Farm and Home Bureau exhibits are shown. The money prizes are of substantial size, awarded as follows: $75.00, the grand prize to the county Home Bureau having the largest attendance for the day of any Home Bureau county in the state according to the zoning system. $25.00 to the county Home Bureau having the largest registration in each of the following 4 zones. Zone A—100 per cent of the attendance counted for very distant counties. Zone B— 90 per cent of the attendance for a group of counties including Steuben. Zone C—80 per cent of the attendance for nearer counties. Zone D—75 per cent for neighboring counties. Zone E—50 per cent for Onondaga County.

WITH MUTTON

Soak a tablespoonful of haricot beans overnight. Cut the mutton into small pieces, and fry them just brown in a little dripping. Peel and cut up a carrot, turnip, and onion, and fry them for five minutes in the fat the meat was fried in.

Put the meat in a casserole or stewpan, with a seasoning of salt and pepper, the vegetables, and haricot beans. Just cover with water, bring to the boil, remove any scum, then simmer for two hours.

Two cutlets, or four if small, may be cut off from the neck of mutton and grilled or fried in egg and breadcrumbs and served with mashed potatoes, or surrounded with boiled macaroni and tomato sauce.

HOME BUREAU

LOCAL UNITS PLAN PROGRAMS

Within the next few weeks local Home Bureau units in Steuben County will be making their final plans for programs for 1931-32. Most of the units are planning to meet early in July for their program planning discussion and each community is arranging to make this meeting especially interesting to their members and visitors.

The County Executive Committee has made its final announcements concerning the work to be offered. The program was recommended originally by a small project committee and then revised by unit representatives at the spring council and finally approved by the County Executive Committee and college specialists.

Project work for the coming year will include in Housing the reconditioning of furniture such as removing upholstering, bracing, tying springs, etc., and the making of a slip cover for the reconditioned article. Clothing and Millinery will include style talks by Mrs. Tobey in both Hornell and Bath and a project on fitting and use of the commercial pattern. Foods and Nutrition offers some timely demonstrations and discussions on low cost meals and plans are being made to make a foods survey in several communities to be used as a guide for the choice of foods work in the coming years. Modern methods of housecleaning will be the subject of three different discussions and a specialist will be available to talk on the uses of paints.

In line with the general trend of all organizations to include some health work in their program the family health conferences will be conducted by a state health department nurse. Other special features on the program for the year will be officers' conferences held in September, a membership drive from August 15 to September 1, continuation of the Rural School Beautification Contest, sponsoring of the County library and county 4-H club work. The state dramatics specialist will give a revised project on play production to leaders and Home Bureau members and the county is inviting leaders of any other organization to attend these meetings.

Units that have taken the first project in leathercraft may continue with the advanced work this year including the making of larger articles, advanced tooling and other advanced methods.

Special services sent out during the year will be the monthly recreation letter, the monthly gardening letter, monthly nutrition news to nutrition local leaders and other special material.

BLOOD IMBALANCE

Nothing should be appreciated more than perfect circulation of the blood in the body; and, very many times we physicians, meet with variations from normal, which may be called "imbalance," or engorgements here and there, which may vary from congestions to actual dilatations of the vessels—organic disease.

People with big abdomens are sufferers in varying degree, from blood imbalance. There are great many veins that traverse the abdominal wall and visceral content there situated. Anything that may cause "rush of blood" to these blood-vessels, produces immediate and very evident effect on structures elsewhere. A big meal is an example—overeating; intense determination of blood to the stomach and bowel, depleting the brain for the time being, causing dizziness, cloudy vision, staggering gait, stupor, with heavy feeling throughout the already overfleshed abdomen. The symptoms may amount to a temporary helplessness, a not very enjoyable feeling in elderly persons.

I believe without accurate figures, that one-fourth of the blood volume may flow in a great tidal-wave to a ponderous abdomen, from overexertion, overeating, etc.; and, that this condition reacts heavily upon the heart and brain; of course the veins of such an abdomen become much dilated from the constant sagging, making possible, if I may use the term, "abdominal apoplexy." And here it is that the "tubby" abdomen is a very troublesome luxury.

Methods of correction are slow, discouraging, and are seldom persisted in to get the relief possible. Carefully practiced exercises are productive of results. Of course free daily evacuation of the bowel MUST be maintained. Here it is that starches in the diet must be cut down to a minimum. Indeed, the diet must be just what is needed and no more. In chronic cases patients who are short of breath and puff with slight muscular exertion, may wear a well-fitted bandage to support the sagging, indolent organism. I personally know a man who declares he couldn't "navigate" without his abdominal support, which holds the dilated veins within bounds.

PLAN HEARINGS ON PRODUCE GRADES

Fewer Farm Meetings in July But Some Promise Far-Reaching Results

In a series of meetings early in July New York state farmers have the opportunity to hear the recommended provisions of the new produce law, which becomes effective July 1. Certain features of the new law are mandatory and cannot be changed; however, the grades to be used are not officially set. These hearings are for growers and are the first opportunity to hear a full explanation of the new act designed to raise the standard of New York state produce and to protect the consumer.

The first of the meetings is in the courthouse in Riverhead, Long Island, June 29 at 7:30 P. M., daylight saving time. The other meetings are scheduled on standard time and are held at: Plattsburg, Y. M. C. A., July 6 at 2 P. M.; Syracuse, Onondaga Hotel 2 P. M., July 7; Batavia, Court House, 2 P. M., July 8; Cohocton, Warner Opera House, 2 P. M., July 9; and at Wellsville, City Hall, the same evening at 8 P. M.

School for Ministers

The eighth annual school for town and country ministers is in session from July 20 to 31 at Cornell University. This school has attracted more than 100 ministers and their families in past years. Several denominations are represented in the faculty and many of the regular staff of the New York state college of agriculture make contributions to the school.

July 29 is the annual field day of the Empire state potato club at Hubbardsville. Last year nearly 3000 growers gathered at the field day to see the latest potato machinery, inspect fields, and hear outstanding potato growers tell of their experiences.

More home flowers might be sprayed or dusted if the directions seemed simpler. A "two per cent solution," or "use at the rate of 1 to 500" are common directions but the Cornell leaflet T-1 tells how proper proportions can be mixed by using kitchen tools as teaspoons, tablespoons, and a measuring cup. Ask the office of publication at the New York state college of agriculture for T-1. It is free. The leaflet tells only how to mix and not what to use for different insects and plants.

SAY YOU SAW IT ADVERTISED IN THIS PAPER

BUGS ARE NOT ALL NUISANCES

Flies, mosquitoes, worms and all the creepy, crawly things which damage plants and animals and various manufactured products are only one class of insect, according to Professor P. W. Claassen of the New York state college of agriculture. In a recent radio talk from WEAI on the investigations conducted by the department of entomology, Professor Claassen said that, contrary to common belief, many insects are harmless, and may be helpful.

Midges or gnats are looked upon by most people as pests but they are really beneficial as the larvae of the midges constitute the choicest food of many game fishes. The specialists at the college are studying the problem of fish food, which includes insects, such as midges, mayflies, caddis flies and others. One of the chief problems connected with the rearing of fish is the problem of supplying the proper food. Professor Claassen said that certain insects give promise of being well adapted for rearing in large quantities on weeds and other growth. If, when the investigations are completed, it is found that insects can be reared in large quantities, cheaply and easily, then some real fishing may be expected.

Addison Won a Tough Game

Took Wellsboro into Camp by Score Of 6 to 4 after Uphill Fight

The Tri-County Leaguers from the Old Home Town went into a tie for second place by defeating Wellsboro, Sunday, at the local ball yard by the score of 6 to 4, in one of the hardest fought games ever seen on the field. Addison was on the short end of the count three times, but each time fell on the old ball and hit their way into the lead by hard, clean hitting. Addison's ancient enemy Red Ludlum was in the box and Addison found him for the most hits that they ever registered against him. They kept pecking away at his speed ball until they drove him to cover in the eighth with a deluge of hits and runs. Don Grange worked the first seven innings for Addison and pitched well. Ripley pitched the last three innnings and came through in fine style. The Addison team played great ball in the field. All chances looked alike to the locals and their hitting was timely. Wellsboro's fine team was outplayed Sunday at every point, by the fast travelling young Addison fighters. John Grange was the big hitter with a triple and single. Hewson connected safely twice and Whitmore drove out a timely double. The outfield did some timely fly catching.

Wellsboro broke the ice in the first. Stubby Cruttenden opened with a walk and while two men were forced at second, Lloyd stole the base and came home on Hill's infield single. LaChance opened the second with a hit, stole second and counted on Phil Hickey's safe hit. Wellsboro again took the lead in the fifth on hits by Lloyd and Hill with a steal mixed in. Addison again came right back to tie the count. Jawn Grange gave Sike Boom a big run with a long triple over the manager's head. Ripley smashed one through Yahn to send in Grange. Hits by C. Hickey and Laffkas gave Addison a lead in the sixth. The seventh was eventful. S. Cruttenden doubled and Boom singled. Ripley went to the firing line and Lloyd greeted him with a triple, scoring Stubby and Sike. Ripley then settled down and the scoring was over as far as Wellsboro was concerned. The visitors were a run ahead again and the game was fast ebbing. But the Addison boys were still full of fight. John Grange again started it with a single and Ripley bunted him to second. Brother Don singled cleanly to center sending in John with the tieing counter. Whitmore landed on the fast tiring Ludlum for a double to deep center, scoring Grange and Hewson drove Stubb in with a hard smash over the infield. Johns replaced Ludlum in the eighth and held Addison scoreless. The score follows:
